

Jodie Schildkraut completed her masters degree in biomedical science, with a strong focus on infectious diseases, in 2017. She then joined Jakko Van Ingen's mycobacteriology group at the department of Medical Microbiology, Radboudumc, as a PhD student. She is currently in her third year and her main research interest centers on the underlying mechanisms by which nontuberculous mycobacteria achieve either tolerance or resistance to antibiotics.